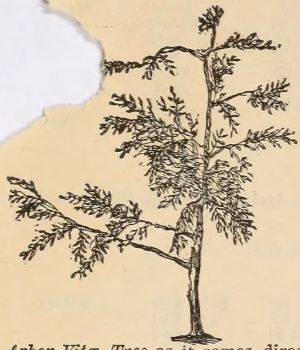
EVERGREEN TREES.

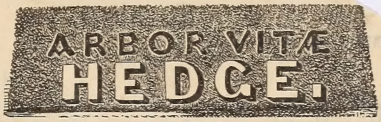


Arbor Vitæ Tree as it comes direct from the forest; often ill-formed. Yet if wanted, price is only one third the cost of well-grown nursery trees of same height.

Nursery-Grown. A good Arbor Vitæ Tree, forming very perfect hedge at once, sure to live if carefully removed and transplanted with skill.

The two cuts on the left illustr tive beauty between forest and nurs Arbor Vitæ.

The cut directly following shows a hedge of this evergreen.



Arbor Vitæ, 2 to 4 years transplanted, thrifty grown, stocky plants:

CURRANTS.

llaise Currant.

The large Red varieties of Currants—Cherry and La Versaillaise—stand out in vigor of growth and fruitfulness, under high cultivation, and command two to three times the price in market of small varieties. Six dollars a bushel were paid for the large varieties in Boston in 1868, and when retailed by the box or pound, commanded more than twice that amount. The difference in price indicates what varieties to plant.
